Hans Robertson leaves his position as President of Saab Training Systems AB

Hans Robertson, President of Saab Training Systems for the past 20 years, has decided to leave his position in order to explore and develop new business concepts.

During his period as President, Hans Robertson has built up Saab Training Systems - a wholly owned subsidiary of Saab AB - into a world leading company in military training equipment specializing in laser simulators, graphic simulators and target equipment.

Saab and Hans Robertson intend to continue their collaboration in new forms. Together, they will be concentrating on new business concepts with the focus on growth.

"I have been dedicated to developing this operation into what it is today and creating prospects for the continued development of the company. Consequently, it feels stimulating to grasp and explore completely new ideas.

"I have always emphasized for my colleagues the importance of change, and after 20 years, it is high time for a radical change in my own situation," states Hans Robertson.

The new President of Saab Training Systems will be Johan Ohlson, currently responsible for the company's purchasing and logistics. He will take up his post on March 1, 1999.

"After working on development, market and logistics questions in Saab Training Systems since 1986, with a break of one year to work as President of the Combitech group, I'm well acquainted with the company's operations and its customers.

"My own goal and that of the company will be to guarantee the future of Saab Training Systems as a leading supplier in our industry," states Johan Ohlson.
