Mind develops WAP solution for the BPA company Enacab

The Internet company Mind has developed a WAP solution for Enacab to make it easier for them to manage and control computer environments. This solution makes it possible for Enacab service technicians to receive information direct to their handheld computers if any disruptions occur in the operating environments of their customers' computers.

Enacab is part of the BPA Group and specialises in the control of operating environments of large computers and servers. Companies employ Enacab to check that their computer environments are perfect in terms of climate, power supply, fire safety, anti-theft protection, etc..

Mind has used software from the company Soft Applications to develop a WAP solution for Enacab to make communication between company technicians and their customers much easier.

In simple terms, this solution means that if any disruptions occur, customers can contact Enacab service technicians through the Enacab website. By accessing the central computer, Enacab service technicians can receive information about their specific customers' computer environments while they are out in the field. The information can be accessed by the technicians' handheld computers via the Internet without having to contact the customer. The technicians can also use their handheld computers to write a report about the action taken and enter it into the central computer.

"Mind's WAP solution makes work considerably easier for our service technicians. We can quickly and easily solve problems without our customers having to worry," says Christer Persson, CEO of Enacab.

"WAP is pioneering technology and will have an enormous impact on society in the future. Our work with Enacab shows that Mind is already capable of meeting our customers' WAP needs," says Jörgen Larsson, CEO of Mind.
