

NOTE to develop electronics for European medical technology company

NOTE's internal development department, which is located at NOTE in Lund, has recently received a substantial order from a European medical technology company to develop the electronics for a heart-lung rescue product. The deal was worked out in cooperation with ems-ALLIANCE, the global network of electronics manufacturers of which NOTE is a part.

The European company sells its products worldwide, and the product will be in first-aid kits within a few years. The order means cooperation with a new customer for NOTE.

"The customer, who wishes to remain anonymous at this juncture, has chosen NOTE because we are global as a result of our collaboration with ems-ALLIANCE, and because we have made such a serious commitment to our development department here at NOTE in Lund," reports NOTE board chairman Sten Dybeck.

"We have found that our Excellence strategy is attracting many new customers. This project is an excellent fit for NOTE Xperi, where we have established a Center of Excellence for medical technology," continues Sten.
