Management changes within Carnegie

On April 26 Mikael Ericson will assume his position as CEO of Carnegie. At that time, a few other changes will be made to the management group.

Per Axman, Group Head of the business areas Asset Management and Private Banking, has decided to leave Carnegie.

”Per Axman has put the wealth management business on the right track and the work will continue at full speed. I would like to thank Per Axman for all his efforts during his time at Carnegie”, says Anders Onarheim, acting CEO.

Carnegie’s management and Board of Directors are currently in the process of streamlining the organisation into two parts: Investment Bank and Wealth Management. Mikael Ericson will become acting Head of Wealth Management (Asset Management, Private Banking and Max Matthiessen) and will also become acting Head of business area Asset Management. Christoffer Folkebo will become the new Head of Private Banking while remaining CEO of Max Matthiessen.

Anders Onarheim, today acting CEO, will become Head of the Investment Bank, i.e. the business areas Securities and Investment Banking.
