SaabTech receives SEK 90 million order for further development of the Swedish Air Defence System StriC

SaabTech has received an order for the adaptation, maintenance and further development of StriC, the Swedish Air Defence System, and Strics, a customised air simulator for StriC.

StriC is an air surveillance and tactical fighter control system that has been in operational use within the Swedish Air Force since 1998.

The order is valued at SEK 90 million. It is an important order since it contributes to the further development of SaabTech Systems world leading competence in the area of command and control systems within Air Defence and future network based solutions.

Saab is one of the world's leading high-technology companies, with its main operations focusing on defence, aviation and space. The group covers a broad spectrum of competence and capabilities in systems integration.
