SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, (April 19, 2010) – Nature Air, the world's first carbon neutral airline, just announced that travelers looking to keep more money in their wallets can have their wish. The airline is introducing an unlimited Nature Air Flight Pass.

If it's flexibility travelers are looking for, they'll get just that with the new pass. Starting April 19 through Dec.15 the Nature Air Flight Pass can be purchased for two consecutive weeks or an entire month. For the cost of just two round trip tickets, NatureAir passengers can fly as many times as they like during the period of two weeks. For less than the cost of four round trip tickets, they can enjoy unlimited flights for the period of an entire month.

The Nature Air Pass allows travelers to be completely spontaneous during their trip to Costa Rica. They can go where they want, when they want, for an incredibly affordable price. The two-week pass costs $499 per person and the month pass costs $799 per person with an option to add unlimited flights to Bocas del Toro, Panama for $100.

"The beauty of Costa Rica is that we have so many unique places and activities for someone to experience. The only difficulty is trying to do it all," said Alexi Huntley, Chief Commercial Officer of Nature Air. "That's why this Nature Air Pass is tailored for our core market, the adventure traveler. Now you can easily watch the sun rise in Tortuguero and surf at sunset in the Pacific. That's is what this pass is all about."

With 17 destinations in Costa Rica and Panama the Nature Air Pass is the ticket for travelers to do more in less time in this wonderfully diverse country. Take a dip in thermal hot springs of Arenal, soar through the trees in a tropical cloud forest in Monteverde, swim with the sharks off the Osa Peninsula or enjoy a fresh seafood dinner on an island in Bocas del Toro. Nature Air's eco-friendly travel designers, Nature Vacations, offer travelers assistance planning all of the adventures in between flights.
