Microjocs launch mobile multiplayer game using Terraplay Systems mobile multiplayer middleware

Stockholm, March 25, 2004.

Microjocs Mobile SL a leading Spanish mobile games developer demonstrates its first mobile multiplayer game based on Terraplay Systems networking technology at SUN's booth at the Game Developer Conference in San José, CA.

Microjocs one of the leading Spanish mobile games developers has developed an exciting motorcycle racing game – "NEON Racer" where up to four players can race head-to-head in real time over a GPRS connection and is in this first version available for Series 60 devices.

"Wireless gaming will reinvent itself opening up a universe of possibilities for playing with anyone, anywhere. Through Terraplay's technology Microjocs is delivering the real multiplayer experience", says Gerard Fernandez, CEO at Microjocs Mobile SL.

To facilitate the multiplayer capacity Microjocs has utilized the mobile multiplayer games networking middleware Terraplay MOVE, from Terraplay Systems. The Terraplay MOVE solution is used by a constantly growing number of games developers around the world and Terraplay enabled games are currently commercially available for gamers from a growing number of operators and game service provider's gaming sites.

"We are very pleased over that Microjocs has selected our technology for this exciting real-time multiplayer mobile game which really meets the demands from both consumers and service providers for new rich mobile entertainment", says Steve Morris, mobile content manager at Terraplay Systems.
