Terraplay expands global network with moves into the UK and Singapore

Stockholm, 2006-05-04. Terraplay announces the setup of two new offices in response to increased global demand for its services.

Terraplay have today announced the setup of two new offices as they push forward with commercial expansion in the online gaming market. In response to both customer and market demands, Terraplay has launched an Asian headquarters in Singapore and a Western European office in the United Kingdom.

Terraplay's increased market take-up has resulted in greater demand for both partner management and sales resources on a global basis. With these two new locations Terraplay are commencing an expansion that will re-affirm its leading position in the online mobile gaming space.

Running Terraplay's Singapore headquarters is newly announced signing Ben Gilbey who, with five years in the mobile content business and fifteen years of technology and multimedia development in Asia, brings a wealth of experience and industry contacts to the role.

Successful services in the United Kingdom and increased market demands in the area will be met by Darren True. Darren brings a proven track record of success within the mobile content and entertainment industry, working within both operators and mobile service providers.

"Terraplay has consistently proven its capabilities to compete and win deals on a global basis. In response to both increased market traction and customer opportunities, the requirement for regional presences has become paramount", says Stephen Morris, Sales Director at Terraplay, "this expansion will continue and assist us in the growth and management of our Global Gaming Network."
