Jean-Pierre Jouyet, Chairman of l'Autorité des marchés financiers (AMF) to expand exclusively on the details of MiFID II at TradeTech France 2012

The review of MiFID II will be released in late October and TradeTech France will be the perfect timing for l'Autorité des marchés financiers \(AMF\) to respond on the MiFID implications for the capital markets industry. Mr Jouyet is using TradeTech France as a platform to provide first-hand clarity on the details of the legislative proposal.

Talks about MiFID II discussions over the last 18 months have focused on big headlines such as G20 commitments on derivatives trading, political concerns over the link between rising food prices and the financialisation of commodities markets, the flash crash, HFT and the role of technology in the marketplace.

To a large degree, the financial services industry should have a relatively good idea of what is coming - yet the reality is that we should expect a few surprises in these areas. Some of the most important of these areas are those that will affect the buy side most of all, in particular the regime governing best execution which is being questioned for its effectiveness and scope.

The European Commission's proposal to be published in October is only the beginning for political engines of the EU. MiFID II still has a long way to go before it becomes final and there will be various opportunities for market participants to have an impact on the legislative process. Your very first opportunity to personally approach the French regulator will be at TradeTech France on 13 February 2012 at the Pullman Hotel, Tour Eiffel in Paris.

About TradeTech

Since its launch in 2001, TradeTech has become the industry's prime source of strategies, information and networking and is the most comprehensive industry get together in the world. TradeTech now runs 40 events globally that cover regionally specific topics and also delves deeper into specific areas with our TradeTech Architecture and TradeTech liquidity spin offs.

It combines a high level conference, with an exhibition hall, to combine unparalleled networking, benchmarking and learning opportunities into one event. Created by an industry advisory board, it is an event created “for the industry by the industry” where all the key issues are uncovered, discussed and resolved.

Every TradeTech is fully supported by large investment banks, as well as dozens of solution providers, MTFs, stock exchanges and technology innovation companies and industry media.
