3. Band 5 Registered General Nurses to work in the Surrey and Essex areas. Candidates will need to be competent to work within acute hospital environments and compliant to NHS standards. To secure shifts, contact adam.padayachee@NSofUK.com

NSUK is reminding nurses and HCAs to ensure that their personal on-line files with the agency are kept up to date. If candidates are working regular shifts for NSUK within the NHS, they must be fully compliant to NHS standards at all times. When relevant documentation is due to expire - such as training certificates, CRB or Occupational Health yearly review, all of which expire annually - it is imperative to update the training and/ or renew relevant documentation before it expires, the agency says.

If candidates wait until certification has expired, all forthcoming shifts are automatically cancelled, and staff are then unable to be booked for shifts until the updated documentation is in place.

There are many candidates who have reached a basic level of compliance to work with private clients of NSSA, the agency says, but who have not yet reached the top level of compliance – PASA compliant - which enables them to work within NHS settings. The agency emphasises the benefits for candidates of working to achieve compliance to NHS standards, which will further improve opportunities for work.
